

Peace workshops for Quakers and others

Workshops:

- to provide encouragement and support
- for people to learn from one another
- to explore and to develop ideas for action.

An outline of the aims of each workshop listed below is given on the following pages.

- Building Peace Together
- Rethinking security – ideas to action

Our workshops

We have created a general framework for the two workshops listed here but will plan the content with particular areas of concern, interest and need in mind as appropriate.

The aim is to provide support to Quakers and others in reflecting and taking action for peace.

Workshops will be facilitated by voluntary members and paid staff of Northern Friends Peace Board, for between 12 and 25 participants. Our priority is to run workshops in the North of Britain.

We envisage that these will typically take place on a Saturday for either a full or half day in a Quaker Meeting House or similar venue, or online via Zoom.

We are happy to discuss other timings and other themes.

We suggest a donation of £100 from the hosting group to cover some of our costs for an in-person event, but please contact us if finance is an issue.

Please contact the Northern Friends Peace Board (NFPB) Coordinator, Philip Austin, via the details overleaf if you would be interested in inviting us to do a workshop.

Building Peace Together

This workshop aims to support people in working together for peace, building on resources that we have in our communities.

It will explore how we include and engage with a wider audience in our peace action and witness, and ask how dialogue and constructive exploration of difference can be part of our work for positive change.

The workshop is about making space for hope, for listening and transformation in our action for peace.

Rethinking security - ideas to action

What is security? Where does it come from? Does my security provide you with security? Indeed, does security secure peace? What are the implications for building peace through non-military means, from local to international levels?

This workshop will look at security and insecurity both from the experiences of participants and their communities, as well as from some of the ideas that a range of individuals and groups have developed in recent years. The workshop will provide space to re-envision what security means and consider the practical opportunities and challenges arising from this.
